THE ANCIENT ROMAN STORY

The story takes place in ancient Rome. The structures were intact, the sun was shining. It was a beautiful day. Jupiter sat there thinking to himself, “This is delightful. I feel strong and healthy.”

Jupiter was the son of Saturn. Saturn was the god of sun. Saturn had many children. His children were Jupiter, Neptune, Pluto, Juno, Ceres, and Vesta. Saturn fathered them.

Jupiter knew who his family was always doing something. He did not feel like anything was out of the ordinary. He just believed what he was doing was the right decision, the healthy decision, and the protective decision. Jupiter understands his position in this world but he is adapting. He feels powerful and he feels insightful. Jupiter sat on his chair with his scepter and globe to his left. Jupiter had an eagle on the other side as he sat and looked straight. Jupiter had deep admiration for the world and everything in it. He was intrigued by time and his essence. He has a body but he felt stronger and superior to the ordinary man.

He believed all men were created equally. It was just a feeling he had, maybe even his ego. Something was making him strive for achievements. He had accomplished some of his goals but he wanted more. He got up from his chair and looked for his imperial papers. The imperial papers were one of his greatest works thus far. He had written them after graduating from university. These papers were full of achievements, concepts, beliefs, and many thoughts.

Jupiter believed in action but he had documented his thoughts as well. He was unaware if this documentation was for memory purposes or something else. He glanced down and read the title, “Imperial Works”

He was an author, inventor, and the Roman sky god. Jupiter controlled the entire sky 24 hours per day and 7 days per week.

He checked in with his brothers Neptune and Pluto every once a while for occupational related matters.

Neptune was the god of the sea. Neptune had a carriage that was underwater. The carriage was pulled by seahorses. Seahorses were simply horses but in the sea. They could move him around swiftly and steadily where he needed.

Pluto was the god of the underworld.

Pluto controlled the underworld, including Neptune's previous enemy. The name of the enemy, "Lapis Lazuli." Pluto turned the enemy into a metamorphic rock. Pluto was mining Lapis Lazuli. He was using it for how he saw fit. He was in control of minerals and other wealth forms. Pluto was interested in the rock because of all the things you could make. The rock had a multi-purpose, just like a person can have. Pluto saw it as a tool for whatever he wanted. A mineral can be described as, "a solid inorganic substance of natural occurrence."

Minerals were very important to Pluto. He thought they were resources for him in times of need.

Neptune used a chariot in the waters for transportation. He found himself very powerful and controlled many creatures and even people. He was a sea god.

Jupiter used the sky to his advantage, including thunder and lightning. He believed that what he was doing was right. Every decision he made was done carefully and with great thought. Jupiter was not power hungry, he was fair and had strength. Some gods referred to him as the "king of the gods."

Jupiter read the "Imperial Papers" again. He realized his writing was with a sharp tool. He enjoyed writing and his words echoed in the skies.

He had written a proposal for the gods and their future. The proposal included topics like space, grounds, waters, resources, and sustaining the environment.

Jupiter was the best of the best in terms of the gods. If you controlled the sky, you controlled the most space.

He needed resources like Pluto had but he felt like lightning and thunder were in his control. He had to find the right means to live a very long life. He had questions but came up with some of the answers on his own. He wrote down his beliefs and even some of his plans. He had different manuscripts but his history and future.

Jupiter sat on his chair and looked at the globe. He noticed his eagle was making noise. He gave the eagle a piece of paper rolled up that said “Saturn, I am writing this to inform you of your dominance over the Giants.” He gave the eagle the paper and said, “Soar.”

The eagle flew off and disappeared. Jupiter sat steadily and walked across the floor he had built. It felt like he was floating but there had been wooden flooring below him. He truly was the god of the sky.

Jupiter thought to himself, “I am an archaic god.”

He realizes that what he does matters. The decisions he makes, matter. The things he says, matters. He needs to act appropriately and properly to keep control of the sky. He realized he wanted to invent something. Inventions were not his speciality but maybe he could practice and learn. He could make some form of creation.

From my understanding, I was from earth. Jupiter wandered on and on throughout the skies but not too far from home. After all, the sky was his home. He was thinking about building again, similar to his wooden floor in the sky.

Jupiter thought to himself, I am not archaic yet but someday, I will be. I want to leave as much information and facts about myself and this world as I can.

I believe I have the power to complete many tasks in this world. It is my understanding that nobody on Earth may assign tasks to me. I guess my father, Saturn can. I would have to respect Saturn but also believe my decisions are right. I have to understand my father in a different way compared to my siblings. It is a different relationship. After all, I am an individual. Saturn is an individual as well. I have to dig deeper into my conscious and subconscious, if possible. I have to articulate what I am writing and reading at a high level or this will never work.

Jupiter was sorting through his thoughts and he wanted to know if anyone would ever read his work. He said to himself, “My mind controls my body.”

Jupiter had stormed off to his old living space, it was still unoccupied in the sky. He traveled quickly through the stars to see who else was in the sky. There were no signs of anyone else at this time. He then traveled back to his current headquarters as lightning struck earth. The lightning typically never hurt anyone, it was just lightning. If the lightning struck a person or metal near a person, then there could be damage. It was very rare for this to happen though.

Jupiter was mentioned often throughout this story, most believe he is the main character. He sometimes becomes overwhelmed with his duties in the sky. He sometimes feels responsible for earth but knows his place. He was not the creator of earth. The creator of earth is God.

Jupiter wants to feel like himself, he understands that home is considered where he is. He wants to keep exploring but communicating with Saturn, his father. He also thinks and knows that his siblings care. He understands that family cares.

Jupiter sometimes felt like he was a supreme being but what did he have to show for it? He did not always know how to explain his feelings. He just knew he was different from everyone else. He understood he only got 1 life and he wants to make the most of it. Jupiter found himself at home, he had an upstairs and a downstairs. All he had was an animal that was living with him. He had his globe and other tools to help him but the eagle was the only living thing with him.

Jupiter knew something big was coming soon. He didn't know what or when it was, but just that something was coming. Jupiter had thought differently than others. He always thought of the present but also the future. He occasionally had flashbacks but he always wanted to do more. He knew what was possible, he trusted and relied on himself to get work done. He often thought about the calendar and the different eras. These eras include BC, CE, and AD. Right now, the current year is 2026 AD or just 2026.

Jupiter has so much to live for, although this is an old story. These stories are believed to be ancient myths but most of the writing is originality of the writer, myself.

Jupiter went to see Rome, he was king. He struggled with what to do as king because he wanted to expand his influence over the globe. He debated traveling to other territories of the globe to expand his power. He ruled over Rome for many years and some even believed him to be a god or supreme being. He knew God was the creator of Earth, and he knew there was a difference between "God" and "god."

Jupiter wants many things to come from his life, wealth, family, power, a long life. There is much he hopes to attain and accomplish throughout his years on earth and in power.

Jupiter was one of the most powerful beings on earth during his time. He needed to draft documents and gain trust of his people. He needed to accomplish work and expand his knowledge. The next step was to learn and research about the calendar. He needed to figure out the best calendar for the time period. At this time, the Julian calendar was used for Jupiter.

The year of this story takes place in 100 CE (Common Era). This was after BC which stands for Before Christ and before Anno Domini or "AD" which stands for, "in the year of the Lord."

The Common Era was a lot about the calendar and many things happened. I am going to take this time to write about the calendar now.

Anyways, Jupiter had planned for a new calendar to appear later like the "Gregorian Calendar" which is the modern day calendar for most places in the world, today. For example, today is April 11, 2026. I have been inspired by different stories but the art has also intrigued me. There are many roman stories that are dated from a long time ago.

Jupiter could see the future in many ways, in other ways, he felt like his memories and thoughts were all mixed up on a timeline. He wanted to do a better job of getting things in order. At this time, it was before the birth of Jesus.

Jupiter wanted to make the world better for everyone but he needed a clearer purpose. He wanted to help the people who supported him and believed in him. He was unsure how to influence people at this time. Jupiter was believed to be the king of the gods. He was the king of Rome. The year was 100 BCE, Jupiter went to the water because he was thirsty. He understood that other people may be thirsty too. He told everyone he knew that there was water north of the city. This water was from a lake which people could drink. The ocean cannot be drunk from, it's salt water. Jupiter noticed he was hungry as well and knew there were apples and other fruits in the market. The market had farmers with land who grew vegetables and fruits for civilians to eat. Jupiter stopped at the market and retrieved apples, corn, and oranges. He brought this to his house where he made a feast. They also had bread at the market which he ate once he arrived home. He had a feast. There was water that he brought home as well in a bucket. Jupiter was hoping to start a movement. That movement was about survival and being healthy. He wanted people to make good decisions and to get what they wanted. He did not want people to die of thirst or starve.

The capital provided housing for some civilians which were paid to the king, Jupiter. However, some people could not afford housing in the capital. Some people lived down by the lake where housing was more affordable. They built their own shelter, using wood and things of that nature.

There were animals as well that were around the lake every once and awhile. Animals were thought to be a part of Rome. Jupiter believed in the law and everything that the law stood for.

Ancient Rome did not feel so new or old at the time. It felt like living. The capital was known for meeting civilians, writing documents, and all sorts of productive activities. Almost everything done at the capital was about work. Either about precious metals or resources used for work. They spoke about advancements in civilization for multiple purposes.

They used techniques to advance civilizations like communication, whether that was speaking and/or writing, they used living to advance civilizations. This civilization was doing well because they worked together. They were trying to capitalize on the goods they provided and used.

This empire of the King was hoping to last for 500 years at least. There were thoughts that Jupiter had about his legacy. How could he leave something on Earth once he is gone? Was it reproducing? He knew he wanted to reproduce (have children) at some point. He has to meet the right woman and have children with her.

Jupiter was not considered about social norms, what age is normal to have children. He was not worried about comparing himself to others and what was normal for what age. He just wanted to be healthy, powerful, and resilient.

Jupiter has recovered from damage. He did not wish to speak on it other than he has recovered.

Days felt like they were going by, he was hoping people of the civilization were making the most of it.

Ancient Rome had around 1,000,000 people as an estimate.

There are so many things to cover that Jupiter needed to discuss at a meeting with others in the capital. He asked everyone if they were eating enough, they said the normal amount. He wanted people to be honest. He wanted an advanced society. That was what he believed the future could be for Rome.

Jupiter believed many good things to be coming in the near future. He told the capital to communicate with one another, use living on this land as a resource and use it to your advantage. If you are paying to live in the capital, use the capital. The capital should be used as a resource to everyone and anyone who lives here. Jupiter felt very strongly about change for Rome and advancing their civilization in some form.

Jupiter asked if there were any questions and there were none. The meeting would take place again in 3 months and it was concluded.
